Subject: [EXTERNAL]: Auction 108

Hello,

I am a customer of T-Mobile USA, residing in the town of South Wales, NY (Zip: 14139). This is an area where AT&T has maintained a gross monopoly of coverage and wireline service, and a company that I cannot afford to conduct business with as they are too costly; also an area where even if Verizon ever decided to become affordable, does not have usable voice coverage.

A little over a year ago when educating myself on how T-Mobile's purchase of Sprint will benefit me, mostly the one tower in town with Sprint [had] and AT&T coverage equipment (recently T-Mobile added their antenna equipment but has it powered off presumably waiting for its license) - I have been waiting for the day that T-Mobile will have continuous usable voice coverage in my hometown for a long time. I am literally talking over a decade now, that is how long I have waited. Don't believe me? Ask T-Mobile, I have no doubt in my mind that they have hundreds of pages of notes dating that far back asking, begging, pleading for this day.

It is my understanding that AT&T has petitioned the commission to do some sort of additional time wasting audit. Presumably a tactic to stall T-Mobile's lead. If AT&T had true concerns about how much spectrum a company should or shouldn't have, those should have been raised heavy before the auction even started, and if they felt a need for more, they should have participated in the Auction. Simple put, they are branding themselves as an embarrassed loser for paying investors instead of reinvesting. You have been elected and appointed to see through this sort of turpitude. Meanwhile, your negligence to T-Mobile customers like myself is completely inexcusable.

I demand to know from the FCC why there is an apparent delay by the FCC in issuing T-Mobile's winning licenses from Auction 108.

I will standby for your response.

Kindly,

Austin-Wyatt Petersen
